Three commercial observations from ProfitPulse, for Taskforce Australia

01

Self funded growth is a cash strategy, not a slogan

Taskforce has told the market it plans fifty to sixty percent compound growth over three years without raising external capital. That target means the working capital cycle, how fast agency clients pay against how fast the trade network is paid, is now doing the job a capital raise would otherwise do. A Working Capital Unlock maps where cash sits across debtors, supplier terms and facilities, and prioritises what releases it fastest.

02

Revenue nearly doubled while the team barely grew

Revenue rose from $7.43 million in FY23 to $12.8 million in FY25, over seventy percent, while headcount held near nineteen to twenty people per Smart50 and LinkedIn. That is strong productivity, and a sign the finance function built for a seven million dollar business is now running one worth nearly double. A 13 Week Cash Flow Build gives the next stage a forward view it currently runs without.

A national contractor network is a timing problem

RentSafe and RentRepair route work through roughly 4,500 to 5,000 vetted tradespeople to serve 180 real estate brands and 300 offices. Every job creates two clocks, one for paying the tradesperson and one for collecting from the client, and the gap between them is where growth capital quietly leaks. A Fractional CFO Partnership keeps a senior finance voice on that gap every month, not just at each award cycle.

These are observations offered in good faith. Taskforce has built something genuinely impressive in a short time. The question is simply whether the financial architecture keeps pace with the growth target.
