Paire: three commercial observations from ProfitPulse

01

Four channels, one P and L: where is the margin?

Paire now earns revenue across four distinct commercial channels: DTC online, QV Melbourne CBD store, South Melbourne store, and wholesale export across 15 retail doors in Singapore and Malaysia. Each channel carries a materially different cost and margin structure. DTC online captures the highest margin per unit with no intermediary. Physical retail adds fixed lease, staff, and fit-out costs. Wholesale reduces per-unit margin but opens volume at scale. Without a channel by channel profitability view, growth capital flows to the highest revenue source rather than the highest return source.

02

Six product categories and one question: which ones win?

Paire launched in 2020 with a single product and now sells socks, underwear, bras, tops, leggings, activewear, and loungewear. Selling 20,000 units of underwear each month signals genuine scale in at least one category. In DTC apparel brands at this stage, a small share of product lines typically drives the majority of gross margin while others generate volume at low or zero contribution. Knowing which categories to scale, which to reprice, and which are diluting return on working capital is the foundation for every inventory, marketing, and expansion decision the business faces now.

Investor backed business needs a margin map, not just a revenue line

Raising AUD 500,000 for 4 percent equity on Shark Tank Australia created an implied valuation of AUD 12.5 million and attached investor expectations. The sharks called it the most successful company to appear on Shark Tank Australia. CEO Nathan Yun has publicly stated the next chapter is profitability over hyper growth. That pivot requires a financial architecture that answers: which products carry the business, which channels deliver real return, and where does capital generate the highest ROI. A product and channel profitability map is the prerequisite for that conversation.

These are observations offered in good faith. Paire has built something genuinely impressive. The question is simply whether the financial architecture now matches the ambition.

Product and Service Line Profitability

$3,950 one off

A three week project ranking every product line and revenue channel by gross margin, contribution margin, and operational drag, with a kill, fix, or scale decision on each. For Paire: maps six product categories across four channels and shows where the Shark Tank capital generates the highest return.
