Sententia Consulting | Three commercial observations from ProfitPulse

01

Financial architecture has not kept pace with the growth

Sententia has tripled revenue on government contract wins. The question a senior finance professional asks next is whether the business knows which contracts produce the best margin after full cost allocation. At $10 million in government consulting revenue, the difference between a high margin engagement and a breakeven one is rarely visible without a deliberate diagnostic. The Strategic Growth Diagnostic maps exactly that.

02

Geographic expansion introduces new structural cost questions

A Melbourne office with its own Managing Director creates real overhead and delivery complexity. Without a financial model for the Melbourne contribution alongside Canberra, expansion can dilute overall margin before it scales. Understanding how the national footprint changes the cost base, and planning the revenue ramp required to absorb it, is the work that belongs in the next financial planning cycle.

Workforce utilisation is the lever that scales with headcount growth

As Sententia grows its team through senior hires and a graduate cohort, revenue per person and billable utilisation become the efficiency measures that define profitability. In a professional services firm at this scale, a five percentage point improvement in utilisation across 30 people can move margin materially. The Workforce Capacity and Utilisation Review is the instrument for this.

These observations are offered in good faith. Sententia Consulting has built something genuinely impressive. The question is simply whether the financial architecture matches the ambition.

Strategic Growth Diagnostic

$5,000 one off

A six week engagement mapping revenue, capacity, and margin headroom, then producing a 12 month growth plan with funding and capital allocation steps across three scenarios. For Sententia, this clarifies which contracts earn the best margin and builds the financial model for the next growth phase.
