COMMERCIAL SIGNALS

- Three consecutive Smart50 listings (2023, 2024, 2025); rank improved 46 to 37
- Stated growth target: 50 to 60 percent CAGR over three years, self funded
- RentRepair subscription maintenance launched at AREC 2023 from $54 per month
- RentSafe platform: 140,000+ jobs delivered across 300 real estate offices
- National network of over 5,000 tradespeople across Australia

Three signals that define the growth picture

01

Platform leverage meets product complexity

$12.8M revenue with 19 people signals strong platform leverage. The launch of RentRepair adds subscription economics alongside the existing compliance job model. These two revenue streams have different cost structures, different cash cycles and different margin profiles. Without a revenue stream map and margin by product line, the growth plan rests on an untested assumption that both will scale together without cannibalising cash or attention.

02

Three rankings confirm the trajectory. The next chapter needs a costed plan.

Rank 46 to 37 across three Smart50 cycles and a 31 percent average growth rate are proof points, not a plan. The stated 50 to 60 percent CAGR target requires a concrete answer to three questions: what headcount is needed to hit that number, how much cash does the ramp consume before new revenue arrives, and what is the RentRepair subscriber acquisition cost and payback period? Without those numbers, the ambition is real but the roadmap is not yet costed.

Subscription economics are different from service economics

RentRepair from $54 per month is a low entry price designed to drive volume adoption. The compliance job model (RentSafe) earns on each transaction. Mixing the two means upfront acquisition costs for subscribers sit against a slower cash recovery curve than the job flow generates today. Modelling unit economics for RentRepair separately, with cohort payback and churn sensitivity, is essential before scaling marketing spend on the subscription product.
