THE OPPORTUNITY

Three commercial observations from ProfitPulse

01

Three lines, unproven margins

Taskforce runs three lines: the original tradie marketplace, the RentSafe SaaS platform serving 20 major brands, and a housing division the company itself calls its most profitable line. A claim like that, made without published unit economics, usually means the comparison was done by feel, not a formal margin model.

02

Revenue up, headcount flat

Revenue moved from $7.43 million to $12.8 million across three Smart50 cycles while the team held at 19 to 20 people. That is strong apparent productivity, but more lines and bigger brand contracts are now being managed without a matching increase in finance or reporting capacity.

A cost signal without a profit map

The 2025 listing notes Taskforce is expanding in house software specifically to find more cost effective delivery. That is a profit instinct without yet the profit map. Knowing which line actually carries the margin would show the software team exactly where that investment pays back fastest.

These are observations offered in good faith. Taskforce has built a genuinely differentiated platform business. The question is simply whether the margin map keeps pace with the lines it now runs.
