Paire: three commercial observations from ProfitPulse01*Cash is funding four fronts at once

Paire now trades in five markets at once: Australia, the US, Singapore and Malaysia online, plus two Melbourne stores. Each market and each store needs its own stock position before a single sale converts back to cash. Funding this many fronts simultaneously, on top of a wider domestic rollout already planned, is a working capital question before it is anything else. A Working Capital Unlock maps exactly where that cash is trapped.

02SKU growth has outpaced margin visibility

Sixty plus products now sit across socks, underwear, activewear and outerwear, sold through direct online, two flagship stores and three overseas markets. At $1.7 million the product mix was simple to read by eye. At $10.0 million across this many channels, blended revenue growth can mask lines and markets that are actually thin on margin once freight, duty and store overhead are allocated properly against each one.

03Growth is entirely founder funded

Paire walked away from Shark Tank offers in November 2024 rather than give up 2.5 percent of the business. That discipline means every store opening and every new market this year is funded from trading cash, not investor cash, which raises the cost of any dollar left sitting idle in stock or receivables, and makes disciplined cash management the difference between funding the next market and stalling before it.

These are observations offered in good faith. Paire has built something genuinely impressive from a garage start. The question is simply whether the cash engine is built to match the ambition of five markets at once.

Working Capital Unlock

$6,000 one off

A four week project that maps cash trapped in stock, receivables, supplier terms and banking facilities across every Paire channel and market, then hands over a prioritised release plan. Typical clients release 8 to 15 percent of revenue back into the business without raising outside capital.
