Inventory and Retail Terms Create a Hidden Cash Gap

Macro Mike is growing rapidly with stock movement tripling year on year in December 2024 and is now pushing into approximately 1,000 new store doors through the Kellogg's distribution launch from November 2025, with a supermarket expansion planned for May 2026. Food manufacturers carry significant inventory at every production stage. When major retail partners pay on standard 30 to 60 day terms and manufacturing costs are upfront, a working capital gap forms that grows in direct proportion to revenue. At over $10 million in annual revenue, even a 10 percent timing gap represents more than $1 million in cash pressure. Working capital discipline at this stage determines whether growth fuels the business or consumes it.

100 SKUs Demand a Profitability Map Before the Next Retail Push

With over 100 products across protein powders, baking mixes and supplements, distributed through direct to consumer online retail, Coles, major supplement chains and 5,000 plus independent retailers, every revenue line carries a different cost to serve profile. Brand collaborations with Golden Gaytime and Kellogg's create significant revenue events but also compress margin if pricing and cost allocation are not tightly managed before the launch. At this scale, businesses that win are those that know exactly which products and channels generate the most margin after full cost allocation. Without that clarity, a major retail push risks scaling the wrong lines alongside the right ones.

International Expansion Needs a Costed Financial Architecture

Macro Mike has publicly announced plans to enter the US, UK, Europe and Asia following the completion of its new 2,000sqm Gold Coast production facility. Entering multiple international markets from a single Australian site, with a product range exceeding 100 SKUs, requires clear capital allocation, channel sequencing and cash flow staging across each market entry. The questions of how much to deploy, in which geography, through which distribution model and in which order are exactly where structured financial planning prevents expensive missteps. A costed 12 month growth plan with scenario modelling is the scaffolding international ambition of this scale requires.

These are observations offered in good faith. Macro Mike has built something genuinely impressive. The question is simply whether the financial architecture matches the ambition ahead.

$6,000 one off | ProfitPulse verified price

A four-week project mapping cash trapped in inventory, work in progress, supplier terms and bank facilities, with a prioritised action list to release that cash. Typical clients release 8 to 15 percent of revenue. At Macro Mike's current scale, that represents between $800,000 and $1.5 million in released working capital.
