Equality Media + Marketing: three commercial observations from ProfitPulse

01

Growth is outrunning the finance function

Revenue reported at Smart50 award time moved from 7.3 million dollars in 2024 to 13 million in 2025, while the team has grown toward 30 people. That pace of hiring and client onboarding is a common point where cash timing, not profit, becomes the real constraint on how fast a business can safely take on new work.

02

Media buying carries a working capital load

Full service planning and buying, including the new ANZ mandate for BIODERMA, typically means paying media suppliers ahead of client settlement. As billings scale, the gap between paying media costs and collecting client revenue widens, and can quietly absorb cash the business assumes it still has on hand.

A four day week raises the value of every hour

Equality Time has delivered 85 percent staff retention, 14 percent growth in gross profit and a 23 percent rise in client work. Running full pay on a 32 hour week means each hour of capacity carries more weight, which makes a live view of where time turns into margin as important as the cash discipline needed to fund growth.

These observations are offered in good faith. Equality Media + Marketing has built something genuinely impressive. The question is simply whether the financial architecture keeps pace with the growth.
